Approved For Release 2002/01/02 : 12/AQRDP72-00337R000200240010-0

WASHINGTON, June 29-President Nixon's venture into Cambodia is ending with proclamations of unprecedented military gain, but it was launched for the broader purpose of rescuing Cambodia from sudden Communist domination and that purpose is still unrealized.

A reconstruction shows that the survival of an anti-Communist Government in Cambodia came to be seen by Mr. Nixon as essential for; the defense of Vietnam and the American stake in Indochina. As pieced together by correspondents of The New York Times in Washington, Saigon and Pnompenh, Mr. Nixon's handling of his most serious crisis also involved the following main factors:

The President, believing that Communist nations had long been trifling with him in Indochina, Korea and the Middle East, saw Cambodia as the first feasible opportunity to demonstrate that he could meet force with force.

¶Mr. Nixon was haunted by intelligence reports that enemy commanders were moving against Cambodia, confident that American hands were tied by warweariness at home.

GBefore attacking, the Nixon Administration tried to signal circuitously to Hanoi that it would accept an accommodation - which the Cambodian Government was seeking-provided that Cambodia's principal port remained closed to Communist supply shipments. The overtures collapsed over the port QOnce he felt himself militarily challenged by the enemy in Cambodia, Mr. Nixon pushed the pace of de-. cision-making here—so much that one senior adviser cautioned him that the generals in Saigon might be giving the President only the advice they thought he wanted to hear.

Repeated and forceful opposition to the use of American troops in Cambodia from divert and disrupt the enemy Secretary of State William P. forces threatening General Lon Rogers, stressing the risks of bodian Premier a badly needed domestic discontent, caused Mr. Nixon to delay the operation 24 hours. tion 24 hours.

Cambodian Decision: Why President Acted

By HEDRICK SMITH

Special to The New York Times

edge, of warning Hanoi against ners at the State and Defense counterattacking across the demilitarized zone into South Vietnam. The four attacks appeared to be a violation of the private understandings with Chiefs of Staff were late to the season of some critical discussions. the North.

Like Predecessors, Uneasy

Formally, the Cambodian four days after it began operations began with a Pres- The gestation process. idential announcement on April Mr.

Communist forces crowding and nouk on March 18. testing him. He had contained the frustration of not retaliating when the North Vietnamese shelled Saigon early in his term, when North Korea shot down an American intelligence plane, ing between the belligerents, and let the North Vietnamese when the Paris peace talks had let the North Vietnamese bogged down. Now the Soviet create a dozen base areas to Union was moving combat pi- shelter 40,000 to 60,000 troops lots into the United Arab Re- for use against South Vietnam, public and Communist forces American generals had tion in Indochina.

the first opening for effective fused. The Nixon Administramilitary reaction that would carry his larger political message. As the President confided to a senior adviser: This is a risk, but this is the kind of thing I have been weiting for the carry have been weiting for the carry his act. thing I have been waiting for tact.

Within the last year, how-

Mr. Nixon's objectives in survival was needed to assure treas. For a time, he curtailed the defense of South Vietnam the enemy supply shipments to and the process of American the bases through the port, withdrawal, to spare Saigon the blow of seeing a neighbor pong Som.

Collapse while the United States

Prince Sihanouk's ouster, dea gain that would tempt it, in the words of one senior adviser, to "go for all the marbles" in Indochina and forever spurn negotiation.

Lift for the Premier

An American attack from the submit contingency plans. rear, Mr. Nixon thought, would Despite his preference for Once decided, Mr. Nixon also orderly procedure, President ordered four heavy bombing Nixon, like his predecessors, raids against North President Releases 200210 wor neetings, late phone despite the year-and-a-half-old group meetings, late phone despite the year-and-a-half-old group meetings, late phone bases.

cessation of United States raids calls, an out-of-channel mes-on the North—with the pur-pose, officials now acknowl- activities that bypassed plan-

Hanoi prohibiting bombing of learn of some critical discussions, State Department lawyers were not told to prepare the legal case for invasion until

The gestation process for r. Nixon's decision was was. 30. But for Mr. Nixon, the be-much longer than Administraginning was well before that tion accounts suggested. It be-Like President Kennedy in gan almost immediately after the Cuban crisis and President General Lon Nol and others Johnson in Vietnam, he felt deposed Prince Norodom Siha-

Twilight Zone of War

For years, Cambodia was a were threatening another na-periodically pressed the Johnson Administration for permis-Of all these situations, Mr. sion to attack these sanctuaries, Nixon felt, Cambodia offered but President Johnson had re-

Cambodia centered on staving off Communist domination. Survival of Premier Lon Nol's Covernment, for a time, at the start of the start Government, for a time, at toil. He allowed Ameri-least, appeared essential. It's van B-52's to bomb the base did nothing and to deny Hanoi scribed as a surprise in Washington, posed an opportunity. agencies foreign-policy quickly drafted proposals for dealing with the new situation. In this process, Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird in-vited the generals in Saigon to

Abrams's Options

By April 1, Gen. Creighton W. Abrams, the United States com-mander in Vietnam had offered the Pentagon several options: First, to let South Vietnamese troops harrass the enemy across

Or third, to let American forces join the South Vietnamese in a swift full-scale assault on the bases.

Using the American forces General Abrams did not formally recommend any course.

Washington was still looking for diplomatic ways to contain the Cambodian situation. Perhaps Hanoi, with its forces! now less secure in Cambodia,1 would show interest in negotiation - if not on Vietnam alone then in the context of an international conference on all Indochina, which France proposed on April 1.

General Lon Nol tried to work out live-and-let-live arrangements with the North Vietnamese, first in direct talks and then through Chinese and other Communist intermediaries. He asked North Vietnam to reduce its military presence in Cambodia and its reliance on shipments through Sihanoukville. Hanoi refused.

Washington made no direct approach to Hanoi, but passed word to Asian intermediaries that it would respect any deal General Lon Nol made, It got no diplomatic reply.

One Diplomat Unsure

One diplomat said the American approach was so feeble and casual that he was not sure the intermediaries understood that the messages were meant for Hanoi. American officials, moreover, were sure that Hanoi suspected the United States of having ousted Prince Sihanouk and could not, therefore, credit Washington with good faith.

South Vietnamese forces, meanwhile, were staging spo-Vietnamese forces, radic raids across the Cambodian border, against the advice of American officials in Saigon. The United States increased bombing raids against enemy concentrations in Cambodia, but General Abrams's contingency plans, now sent by the Joint Chiefs of Staff to the White House, were in limbo.
Secretary Laird, talking with President Nixon in the second week of April, opposed an American assault because he erican assault because he feared heavy casualties — as high as 400 to 800 dead in the first week alone - and a public outcry.

In mid-April the combat situation changed. Starting April 13, enemy forces were detected moving westward into Cambodia from the border areas, cutting roads, blowing up bridges, harassing military posts and towns. The White House interpreted the reports "leniently" — as reliable on "leniently" — as reliable on the location of enemy actions, but not on their size, serious-west of Saigon, which was con-their attacks into Cambodia. sidered the most important en- The purpose, one high official emy refuge area.

General Abrams and Ells-worth Bunker, the American Ambassador, met privately for several nights and about April 15, sent parallel recommendations to the Departments of State and Defense. They urged an American attack into the Fishhook and joint attacks with the South Victnamese against other bases.

Arguments Summarized

military sources High summed up General Abrams's arguments as follows:

One of the two American guard divisions standing against attacks from the enemy bases in Cambodia was going home soon under President Nixon's withdrawal program, shifting a major burden to Saigon's forces. With the rainy season approaching and the Lon Nol Government unlikely to survive until fall, the time was right. An attack would help the South Vietnamese and assure further American withdrawals. With a third of the enemy forces moved west, the risks of American casualties were reduced.

The general's argument envisioning benefits for the Vietnamization program, impressed Secretary Laird. The promise of lower casualties convinced him, and he endorsed the proposal.

But at the White House, the military possibilities were still offset by the fear of pushing the war deeper into Cambodia and the fear of spoiling the chances for negotiation.

The prospects for diplomacy had unexpectedly improved when the Soviet Union said that it, too, was interested in an Indochina conference. "Only a new Geneva conference could bring a new solution and re-lax tension," Yakov A. Malik, the Soviet representative at the United Nations, said on April 16. The Americans got private indications that this as a deliberate initiative and assumed that the Russians had cleared it with Hanoi.

Pressures Still Rise

Still, the pressures in Cambodia were building up. Premier Lon Nol pleaded with greater urgency each day. Mr. Nixon did not want another state in Southeast Asia, dependent on the United States, but neither did he want to stand idly by. High officials felt the whole rationale for de-fending South Vietnam would collapse if they acquiesced in a Communist take-over of Laos and Cambodia. Also, the President feared Prince Sihanouk, with Hanoi's aid, might be re-

bodian salient that juts into || He let Saigon's forces increase said later, was "to put pressure on the enemy forces so they wouldn't turn toward Pnom-

American advisers were told to help plan the enlarged raids, but not get into combat inside Cambodia.

By April 17, the President had also approved a secret shipment of 6,000 captured AK-47 rifles of Soviet design to the Cambodian Army. The United States first tried to use Indonesia as a cover for this aid, but for reasons of diplomacy, shifted to South Vietnam.

Plans were also made to assemble a force of 2,000 Khmer Krom troops to stiffen the Cambodian army. These mer-cenaries fighting in South Vietnam for the American Special Forces were later flown secretly to Pnompenh.

President Distracted

President Nixon evidently hoped that these measures would win time. He was, in any case, distracted by the battle over his Supreme Court nominees, the Apollo 13 astronauts and the need to announce another troop withdrawal.

General Abrams was pleading for a 60-day delay in with-drawals. Secretary Laird wanted a cutback of 50,000 by Aug. 15. With the issue unresolved, Mr. Nixon went to greet the returning astronauts in Hono-

He finally hit on a compromise, surprising even some senior advisers: to delay withdrawals for 60 days but to hide that fact in an announcement of a full year's pullouts—150,-000 men by May, 1971. Mr. Nixon flew back to San Clemente, Calif., to make the announcement April 20-a long and, as it turned out, fateful day in his perception of the situation in Indochina.

The speech emphasized his terms for a political settlement in more flexible terms than ever before.

He Reiterates Warnings

He did point with concern "the enemy's escalation in Laos and Cambodia" and re-peated warnings that if "in-creased enemy action jeopar-dizes our remaining forces in-Vietnam, I shall not hesitate to take strong and effective measures to deal with that situation."

There was no real hint of the internal discussions about Cam-

Officials insist that Mr. Nixon's optimism did not disthat Mr. guise any secret calculations. Press dispatches had already reported the fall of Saang, a district capital 18 miles from

Mr. Nixon as he spoke—Hanors Chiefs; Adm. Thomas H. Moorspokesman in Peking indicated that Prince Sihanouk was join- Greene, Assistant Secretary of ing a new united military front for the "liberation" of all Indochina; the Russians backed off their interest in a Geneva conference, and the Lon Nol re-gime submitted a request for more than $500-million in military aid.

Mr. Nixon was restless that night—"wound up," his wife said—and after his speech, abruptly flew back to Washington. One aide said afterward that the President might have sensed "something was up.

Confirmed by Intelligence

By morning, intelligence reports had built up a picture of steady deterioration in Cambodia, but the problem hit Mr. Nixon with sudden force.

From that day on, Mr. Nixon got daily briefings from Richard Helms, Director of Central Intelligence. Details were sketchy, but the Communists were attacking Saang, Takeo and Angtassom, south of Pnompenh and Snoul and Memot, to the north.

The State Department surmised that the enemy was using hit-and-run maneuvers to create an impression of civil war. The Pentagon view, more persuasive to the White House, was that the North Vietnamese had decided to overthrow Lon Nol by isolating his capital, or taking it.

Mr. Nixon summoned National Security Council to meet on April 22, the group's first consideration of the contingency plans. The talk centered largely on a proposed South Vietnamese offensive into the Parrot's Beak, an enemy position jutting into Vietnam 35 miles from Saigon. There was some discussion of an American attack into the Fishhook.

Crisis Schedule Enforced

The next morning, the President seemed bent on some kind of action. He called for operational plans for the Parrot's Beak, forcing a crisis schedule upon the Washington Special Action Group — a body head-ed by Henry A. Kissinger, his special assistant for security affairs.

The group, which is called WASAG, was created in April, 1969, when North Korea shot down an American intelligence plane. It played a central role in the Cambodian venture from late March onward by assembling and refining all contingency plans, assessing their consequence, and managing the execution of Presidential orders

At the peak of crisis, the group's members were Mr. Kisturned to power.

So Mr. Nixon set out to help Premier Lon Nol clargestinely described Approved Secretary of Defense; U. Alexisinger; David Packard, Deputy the Office of Emergency Premation did not reach the travellar of Secretary of Defense; U. Alexist Secretary of Defense; U. Alexist Secretary of Defense; U. Alexist Johnson, Under Secretary of Premier Lon Nol clargestinely described and the had approved the Office of Emergency Prematical Research Secretary of Defense; U. Alexist Secretary

On that day, too-aithough Helms: Gen. Earle G. Wheeler, er, his successor, and Marshall State for East Asian Affairs.

The group met twice on April 23, again on April 24. In Saigon, the South Vietnamese generals were hesitant about a major strike without the Americans. General Abrams and Ambassador Bunker met with President Nguyen Van Thieu, after which Saigon finally geared for action while General Abrams pressed Washington to use American advisers in the Parrot's Beak operation.

Nixon Is litate

M. Nixon was now pushing the process of making decisions, irritated that the enemy appeared complacent. Americonfirmed. intelligence can anew that the enemy command was telling its troops to push west without fear of an American attack from the rear. The White House denounced the the enemy moves as a "foreign invasion."

On Friday morning, April 24, the President called for operational plans for the Fishhok operation to be delivered from Saigon within 24 hours. He called a secret meeting of the National Security Council for Sunday, pointing toward a final decision Sunday night. This would give the generals the 72 hours they said they needed to attack on April 29, which would be dawn, April 30, Saigon time.

The President flew to Camp David, Md., Friday afternoon. mr. Kissinger brought the plans on Saturday and the two men studied them. In Wasington that evening, they conferred with Secretary Laird and At-General John torney Mitchell aboard the Govern-ment yacht Sequoia on the Potomac. They then attended a private showing of "Patton." the film biography of the defiant general, which Mr. Nixon was eager to see for a second

Two Members Absent

Secretary of State Rogers returned from New York on Sunday morning and, with Secretary Laird, heard a Pentagon briefing on the Fishhok plans. Thus all participants in the afternoon meeting of the Security Council were prepared for the main topic of debate.

The two Secretaries joined the President, the Attorney General, General Wheeler, Mr. Helms and Mr. Kissinger at the Executive Office Building next to the White House. Two statutory members of the Council, Vice President Agnew and George A. Lincoln, director of tentative approval, with American air support but not American ground advisers. The Fishhook was the problem at hand.

Approved For Release 2002/01/02 : CIA-RDP72-00337R000200240010-0

The Pentagon represent-atives argued that a full as-sault, with American troops; was essential. Military analysis showed the enemy seeking either to topple the Lon Nol regime or to clear a supply cor-ridor to the sea in eastern Cambodia. Either prospect jeopar-dized the defense of South Vietnam and American withđrawal. The Parrot's Beak alone would serve only as a warning. Using the South Viet-namese in the Fishhook would require a major reshuffle of armies, and might prove too difficult for them. With the never:

Secretary Rogers carried the principal burden of opposition. The use of American troops in military or intelligence chiefs. Cambodia meant widening the Someone—apparently still war. The risk was grave of Mr. Rogers—suggested that the becoming entrapped, as the military might be telling the Johnson Administration had President only what it thought here. The President was graved by wanted to hear The president was graved to hear The presiden been. The President won wide he wanted to hear. The suggespopular support for gradual withdrawal and should not risk out-of-channels message losing it. The allies' military objectives could be achieved by South Vietnamese forces to-man. alone.

They Meet for 3 Hours

debate lasted three hours, ranging over other enemy base areas. Mr. Nixon came away thinking he had a alone seemed unlikely to bring much military advantage. To use only South Vietnamese ground forces would be a pretense, for American air and lo-gistical support was deemed essential. It was a line of thinking Mr. Kissinger appears to have shared. Besides, the President was determined to prove that he could meet force with force.

Mr. Nixon withdrew to his hideaway office and ordered a tray of dinner. On a pad of yellow legal paper he summarized the pros and cons. As disclosed by Stewart Alsop in Newsweek and later confirmed officially, the President's doodling showed how intimately the survival of the Lon Nol regime had become linked in his mind with American success in Vietnam.

In reviewing whether there should be some action in Cambodia, Mr. Nixon listed only arguments in favor: "Time runarguments in favor: "Time running out" was followed by "military aid" to Lon Nol could be "only symbolic." Then came a scribble saying inaction might tempt Hanoi to install a puppet the President prepared his own nal entry saying that inaction by both sides would leave an on Tuesday and Wednesday arrange Thal support as well. by both sides would leave an "ambiguous situation" with time favoring the Communists.

Liabilities Listed

The President then listed the pros and cons for American action in the Fishhook and for a South Vietnamese attack alone in the Parrot's Beak. He recognized that the Fishhook move would bring a "deep di-vision" of the American people. He feared that it might provoke a collapse of the Paris talks, an attack on Pnompenh or a major North Vietnamese attack across the DMZ.

Mr. Nixon seemed deter-mined to attack, but the opposing arguments of Secretary Rogers evidently led him to break his own deadline. He heavy rains due in a month, break his own deadline. He and Lon Nol unlikely to sure called another meeting for vive until fall, it was now or Monday morning, April 27, with Mr. Rogers, Mr. Laird, Mr. Kissinger and H. R. Haldeman, his chief of staff, but without the > that meeting came his personal, General Abrams demanding "the unvarnished truth," man-

That afternoon, Mr. Rogers testified at a closed session of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and ran into a storm of opposition to possible American involvement in Cambodia. Without directly disclosing the choice of doing nothing or in-volving American troops. An attack in the Parrot's Beak at the imminence of a military decision. Mr. Rogers recounted the Senators' objections in a long telephone report to the President that evening.

Wrote His TV Speech

From Saigon, General Abrams replied that an American assault was necessary. With that message and new memos from other advisers; and after one more call to Mr. Laird, Mr. Nixon withdrew to make his decision. The next morning he conveyed it, first to Mr. Kissinger and then to Mr. Rogers, Mr. Laird and Mr. Mitchell, whose advice, always important, to the president is not known in this case.

Having decided to attack in the Fishhook, the President said that he was also sending American ground advisers into the Parrot's Beak and ordering consecutive attacks on a number of enemy base areas. As the operation unfolded, he also approved the four raids on North of his rhetoric.

Some of Mr. Nixon's senior aides, were troubled by the now formally ended is, in fact. President's apocalyptic vision far from over. of the stakes. Others found some military points overdramatized.

The President's assertion that the enemy was massing in the Vietnam contradicted Secretary Laird's support of the American assault because of the enemy's movement the contradicted Secretary lairn's Robert B. Semple Jr., Neil Sheehan, Terence Smith, James P. Sterba and Tad Szulc, movement the contradiction of the second sanctuaries to attack South movement the other way. It also contradicted the latest intelligence that the enemy forces had sensed what was coming and were dispersing faster than before with some of their arms caches.

The generals felt uneasy that Mr. Nixon, to give importance to his move, led the American public to expect the capture of top enemy commanders by an-nouncing an attack on "the headquarters for the entire Communist military operation in South Vietnam." They knew the enemy command unit—the Central Office for South Vietnam, called COSVN -- was always on the move and doubted they would catch its 200 men in Fishhook. Their troops were ordered to "neutralize the COSVN base area"—meaning arms caches, supply dumps and other facilities.

Cable Office Closed

Notice of the President's speech reached Premier Lon Not only after it was over, because the Pnompenh cable of-fice was closed. Although he had agreed in mid-April to deeper raids by the South Vietnamese and more recently to the Parrot's Beak operation, his consent was not sought for the Fishhook. The White House believed if he said "no," it was in trouble; if he said "yes," he might be.

In the days following Mr. Nixon's speech, what the Congress and the public took to be limitations of time and scope on the invasion were only firm definitions of the Administration's private intentions: six to eight weeks and a limit to penetrations of about 20 miles. Some field commanders even found the time limit a welcome surprise; they had expected two to four weeks.

But other rules of engagement had to be adjusted to the enemy's spreading attacks throughout Cambodia. To help Premier Lon Nol defend himself in the months ahead the Administration agreed to leave.

night, staying up toll 5 A.M. American planes now fly tac-Unlike President Kennedy and itical air support for the Cam-Johnson, he never submitted it bodians under the guise of raids for editing by his main cabinet against enemy supply lines; advisers. All of Mr. Nixon's American ships blockade Camsenior aides still wince at some bodia's coastline. And new military and economic aid is being prepared. Thus, the operation,

> This article was written in collaboration with Max Frankel and incorporates reports by William Beecher, Henry Giniger, Henry Kamm, Sydney H. Shanregime in Pnompenh Approved the delegister 2002101102: 图外中7200337R000200240010-0

Ouster of Sihanouk Depicted as Almost an Accident

By NEIL SHEEHAN Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, June 29— The overthrow of Prince Noro-dom Sihanouk of Cambodia, the event that thrust another Asian country into the Indochina war, appears to have been almost an accident for everyone concerned.

The full account of how and why Prince Sihanouk fell as Chief of State is still unknown. However, the United States Government and diplomatic sources here have pieced the fragments together and have produced an account of a Cambadian distribution of the company of the com bodian élite that wandered into a coup d'état and of competing outside powers maneuvering toward a climax that none expected.

Apparently Premier Lon Noi and his colleagues did not de-cide to oust the Prince until one or two days before they leaders encouraged the coup, have offered to fly the Prince and armed the dissident Camback to Pnompenh on the day bodian Communist movement, of the coup in the hope that his presence would reverse events. When he declined, Mosevents when he declined, Mosevents are said to have expect-that he had arranged the whole leagues are said to have expect-that he had arranged the whole leagues are said to have expect-that he had arranged the whole leagues are said to have expect-that he had arranged the whole leagues are said to have expect-that he had arranged the whole leagues are said to have expect-that he had arranged the whole leagues are said to have expect-that he had arranged the whole leagues are said to have expect-that he had arranged the whole leagues are said to have expect-that he had arranged the whole leagues are said to have expect-that he had arranged the whole leagues are said to have expect-that he had arranged the whole leagues are said to have expect-that he had arranged the whole leagues are said to have expect-that his lateral leagues are said to have expect-this la cow set about quietly to try to can and South Vietnamese outdo business with his anti-Communist successors.

Peking Backs Sihanouk

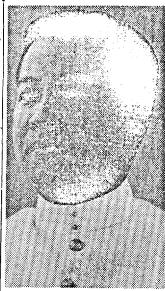

communist china is thought to have tried to persuade to have tried to persuade incitement, of the Khmer Rouge Morth Vietnam to come to terms with the new Cambodian regime. When it failed, it noukville supply route in the wound up supporting Prince Sihanouk's government in exile.

Here is the account as it being precarious neutrality for his General Lon Nol for alleged procountry. When they finally american sympathies.

The Prince did not appear to too that the United States as a coup. He did, however, make entirely new situation.

Last August, economic troubles resulting from the Prince's be useful to gain some credit had a basically rightist com-with Hanoi, whose side he be-leved would win the Vietnam liberalize and stimulate the war. Over several years he economy.

Camera Press-Pix Prince Norodom Sihanouk

of bases along the Cambodian the country.

Peking Backs Sihanouk caused by retaliatory allied communist China is thought bombing and shelling and the

Here is the account as it bles resulting from the Prince's is being recounted by informed nationalization policies and unsources here:
The Vietnamese are the Cam-croachment forced him to form bodians' traditional enemies, another government, He named Prince Sihanouk decided late a Cabinet led by an old assoln 1963, however, that it would ciate, Lieut. Gen. Lon Nol. It nouk went to Hanoi for the Premier Lon Nol on his return. funeral of President Ho Chi Premier Lon Nol began nego-Minh and extracted a promise of better behavior from the North Vietnamese.

But the North Vietnamese did not change their ways. The Cambodian Army engaged them as well as Khmer Rouge bands in scattered clashes. Shortly before he arrived in France in revoultionary government of the Vietcong guerrillas.

Sihanoukville Cut Off

Premier Lon Nol once more cut off Sihanoukville to the Vietnamese at the beginning of this year, apparently with the Prince's acquiescence. In February, the provincial governors met with the central Government in Pnompenh and delivered of detailed and allowed the control of the control formally announced his overthrow on March 18.

While there is a suspicion that some South Vietnamese munists to construct a complex munists to construct a complex management in Pnompenh and delivered a detailed and alarming account of the extent of Vietnamese munists to construct a complex management in Pnompenh and delivered a detailed and alarming account of the extent of Vietnamese munists to construct a complex management in Pnompenh and delivered a detailed and alarming account of the extent of Vietnamese munists to construct a complex management in Pnompenh and delivered a detailed and alarming account of the extent of Vietnamese munists to construct a complex ment in Pnompenh and delivered a detailed and alarming account of the extent of Vietnamese munists to construct a complex ment in Pnompenh and delivered a detailed and alarming account of the extent of Vietnamese munists to construct a complex ment in Pnompenh and delivered a detailed and alarming account of the extent of Vietnamese munists to construct a complex ment in Pnompenh and delivered a detailed and alarming account of the extent of Vietnamese munists to construct a complex ment in Pnompenh and delivered account of the extent of Vietnamese munists to construct a complex ment in Pnompenh and delivered account of the extent of Vietnamese munists to construct a complex ment in Pnompenh and delivered account of the extent of Vietnamese munists to construct a complex ment in Pnompenh and delivered account of the extent of Vietnamese munists to construct a complex ment in Pnompenh and delivered account of the extent of Vietnamese munists to construct a complex ment in Pnompenh and delivered account of the extent of Vietnamese munists to construct a complex ment in Pnompenh and delivered account of the extent of Vietnamese munists to construct a complex ment in Pnompenh and delivered account of the extent of Vietnamese munists to construct a complex ment in Pnompenh and delivered account of the extent of Vietnamese munists to construct a complex there is no evidence that they border with South Vietnam and knew it was coming. Both the United States and North Vietnam and Ville, now Kompong Som.

Lountries most vitally affected, were apparently surprised and uniprepared.

Trying to compel Hanoi to reprince Sihanouk.

Although there has been Cabinet arranged anti-Vietnamese demonstrations early in March. The Cambodian authorities appear to have lost control aged the coup, there is no over the demonstration in bargained for They reorganized

Trying to compel Hanoi to reprince Sihanouk.

Although there has been Cabinet arranged anti-Vietnamese demonstrations early in March. The Cambodian authorities appear to have lost control aged the coup, there is no evidence here of a United States in Pnompenh on March 11 and a Government involvement.

Several days after the March

In September, Prince Siha-clear that he would dismiss

Premier Lon Nol began negotiations with the North Vietnamese on March 13, two days after the sacikng of the embassies. He opened with a public demand that he apparently regarded as little more than a high bid to start the bargaining—the withdrawal of all of the estimated 60,000 Vietnamese January for a lengthy visit, the troops from Cambodia within Prince warned that he might have to break off relations with a readiness to settle for much.

The Vietnamese refused to have their activities thus curtailed. They appeared to be stalling on the assumption that Prince Sihanouk's return would restore the old arrangements.

The North Vietnamese representatives reiterated a hard line in a three-hour confrontation with the Cambodians on March 16, demanding reparations and to have decided to depose mob sacked the North Viet-namese and Vietcong Embas- 18 announcement of the Prince's points for assaults on American and South Vietnamese outposts just across the border.

The Cambodian casualties underlying aims. Instead, in Statements from Paris, he bombing and shelling and the incitement, of the Khmer Rouge American sympathies.